Accuracy of Bible will be discussed

A discussion on the accuracy of the Bible will take place this evening in 111 Olscamp at 8 p.m.

The discussion, between James Sire and Loren Lomasky, will address the validity of Christianity and how the truth can be found.

Sire earned an English doctoral degree from the University of Missouri. Lomasky earned a doctoral degree in Philosophy from the University of Connecticut. He occasionally teaches medieval philosophy and technology.

The event is sponsored by Inter Varsity Christian Fellowship, the Undergraduate Philosophy Club, Fellowship of Christian Graduate Students and campus Crusade for Christ.

Convicted man will get new trial

PITTSBURGH — A man convicted of robbery will get a new trial because the man who prosecuted him was having a romantic relationship with his girlfriend.

On Tuesday, Allegheny County Judge David Cashman ordered a new trial for Thomas Balenger, 34.

Compiled from staff and wire reports.

Dole claims GOP's 'Junior Tuesday'

John King
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- Bob Dole stormed to a commanding lead in the Republican presidential race Tuesday with an eight-state primary sweep against fast-fading Pat Buchanan and a shrinking field of challengers.

"I always felt in my heart it was going to happen, but you never know until the people vote," Dole told The Associated Press, flush with confidence that his third bid for the GOP nomination would be successful.

His victory was fueled by Republican voters anxious to stall Buchanan and turn the party's attention to beating President Clinton in November.

"I think it is a big, big boost," Dole said, predicting he would handily win New York's primary on Thursday and carry momentum into next week's "Super Tuesday" contests in Texas, Florida and five other states.

"I think we are in a very strong position to win the nomination," the Senate majority leader said, and for once there was no voice in dissent.

Dole won primaries in Georgia, Vermont, Connecticut, Maryland, Maine, Massachusetts, Colorado and Rhode Island -- a "Junior Tuesday" primary sweep. There also were caucuses in Minnesota and Washington to begin choosing their convention delegates.

All told, the day's booty represented more than a quarter of the 996 delegates needed to clinch nomination -- with another 93 up for grabs in New York and 362 next Tuesday.

Convinced Dole's lead was insurmountable, Indiana Sen. Dick

Lugar was preparing to quit the chase, an also ran in every primary. He told associates he would bow out Wednesday. It was another dismal election day for former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, and a senior campaign aide told senior Republican officials that Alexander was likely to quit, too perhaps as early as Wednesday.

Some GOP leaders said the nomination was Dole's.

"If he doesn't have it wrapped up, he's close," said Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar. He urged others to clear the field: "There's no need to keep fighting among ourselves."

Buchanan vowed to fight all the way to the August Republican convention, but acknowledged, "It's an uphill battle everywhere."

Publisher Steve Forbes was focusing on the Thursday showdown in New York, declaring, "We can win in New York and nationwide," he said, ignoring Dole's lead in the state -- and the momentum likely to come from Tuesday.

NOW president Patricia Ireland to speak in Union

Kristin Stadum
The BG News

University students and faculty will be given the opportunity to listen to the current president of a national organization tonight. Patricia Ireland of the National Organization for Women is scheduled to speak at 8 p.m. in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom.

Ireland's presentation, "Target '96: 75 Years, Women in the Vote", will focus on the role of women in great elections, how to get more women into office and what the future holds for women, according to Cameron Underdown of the University Activities Organization.

Jeannie Ludlow, faculty adviser for Womyn for Womyn, said Ireland's speech affects the University community.

"It's important for her to come because we're facing an election and it's absolutely critical that we get as much information as possible. We don't have a lot of good choices, so we need to know what's going on."

"Clinton's record for women's rights is better than we give him credit for," Ludlow said. "But the community needs to know what has been done and what still needs to be done."

Women's history month was another factor prompting Underdown's efforts to secure Ireland's visit to the University.

"I was looking for a dynamic speaker to talk about women's rights," Underdown said. "I decided to go to the top of the organization and invite Patricia Ireland."

"It's a terrific way to promote women's history month."

Ireland played a pivotal role in making 1992 the "Year of the Woman." She is also well known for her involvement in civil rights, women's rights and homosexuals' rights movements, according to Underdown.

The presentation is being sponsored by UAO, Womyn for Womyn, the Lesbian and Gay Alliance, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Honors Student Association and Resident Student Association.

Ireland's speech will be free and open to the public.

Sweden bureau censors 'Casino'

The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden -- Martin Scorsese is making sure Swedes know exactly how he feels about the country's censors, who chopped some violent scenes out of his film "Casino."

The Swedish Censorship Bureau forced the director to cut three sequences, totaling one minute and 40 seconds, out of the three-hour movie, arguing that they were too violent for Swedish viewers.

The movie stars Robert De Niro and Sharon Stone in a tale about sometimes bloody mob influence in Las Vegas casinos. Scorsese agreed to the cuts in order to let Swedish theaters show the film. But he added a disclaimer for audiences to read.

"It was my wish that every audience should experience 'Casino' the way I cut it, but that will not be the case."

Volunteers make AIDS Quilt success

Jen Schab
The BG News

Students who volunteered for the AIDS Quilt were largely responsible for the success of the event, according to Tonia Stewart, AIDS Quilt co-chairwoman.

Stewart said 450 volunteers turned out for the AIDS Quilt Feb. 27-29, the bulk of which were students from campus.

Some students served as quilt monitors to make sure the quilt did not get damaged, as greeters who passed out literature and as monitors for the new panels that were being donated.

Other students read names and served as an emotional support and answered questions about the quilt. Several people worked at the merchandise tables, selling T-shirts and other items.

Stewart said 7,300 people went through the display and $2,200 was raised to benefit David's House in Toledo.

"These numbers are indicative of the amount of work that was put into the event," Stewart said. "Volunteers were willing to go beyond the hours of service they signed up for."

"It lets us know that we have students who care," Stewart said. "This was an example of the community, that Dr. Ribeau talks about, at work."

Gale Swanka, co-chairwoman of the AIDS Quilt, said AIDS touches students and this event gave them the opportunity to educate and to get involved.

"Because students are at a high risk, it is important for them to get involved," Swanka said. "Half of all new HIV infections occur in people under the age of 20."

Swanka said volunteering for the Quilt gave students the opportunity to make a difference. "We couldn't have done it without them," Swanka said.

Emily Albrecht, a junior who volunteered for the AIDS Quilt, said her close friend's uncle died of AIDS and it brought it close to home and made her want to do something.

"I thought it was pretty incredible that students showed such interest, caring and support for

No time for time management

Primaries for the nomination of a Republican presidential candidate are in full swing. A clear-cut winner is, well, non-existent. The common consensus has been that the Republicans, since losing a certain very promising Colin Powell, have failed to draw anyone in that the voters absolutely love. And, perhaps the ones that the small primary voting population has chosen should be cause for concern.

Perhaps the most startling of all these mediocre candidates is Pat Buchanan. Many people have heard of his outspokenness, the same quality that got him into a lot of trouble during the Reagan administration -- especially when Buchanan supported Reagan's visit to a German cemetery containing graves of former Nazi Party members.

If this seems mild, consider the following: In a 1990 newspaper column, Buchanan had no qualms about saying that survivors of Nazi death camps were perhaps suffering "group fantasies of martyrdom." In 1977, Buchanan admitted Adolph Hitler was a mass murderer, but added that he was a man of "great courage" and a "soldier's soldier."

Still not convinced? Consider the statement Pat made about women: "Simply not endowed by nature with the same measures of single-minded ambition and the will to succeed." How about gays? "Have declared war on nature." On Martin Luther King, Jr., arguably the greatest American civil rights leader of all time? "Immoral, evil, and a demagogue."

During the current mud-slinging season which has now been embarked upon in high gear, the black-and-white easily turns black-and-blue. The News in no way endorses the name-calling and backstabbing that politicians so frequently engage in when the heat turns up. However, The News does encourage wise voting decisions -- mostly through education about the candidates involved.

In 1996, the United States needs a president that will lead us with confidence, assertiveness and integrity. What is not needed is the close-minded, "whites-versus-the-rest-of-the-world," ruffian-type mind-set that should have been left behind decades ago.

Last Wednesday, I was lucky enough to be one of twenty Theatre, Art, and Music majors invited to the home of President Ribeiro ('El Sid' to his friends) for a discussion of the arts on campus and in society over pizza and soft drinks. At one point, Dr. Ribeiro digressed and asked us if we students felt overwhelmed by our chock full o' arts schedules. The faculty and staff members present were in a general consensus that "back in their day," life was not filled with Franklin planners and "To do" lists. Mine is. Do I feel overwhelmed? 24-7 I do!

My life is dictated by my watch as I try to keep on schedule, running from class to rehearsal to newsroom to radio station. I've come to resent the Tasmanian Devil on my watch because he's always screaming at me in that annoying devil language, telling me to go somewhere.

I don't, however, believe I'm alone. I pass too many folks on campus who wear the same "I'm too harried to fake a smile" look that I sport. A lot of us take this game seriously (some too seriously), even with BGSU's non-sensical system of class requirements that apply to NOTHING. As a Theatre major, the structure of an atom is something I must be versed in, though it comes nowhere near personal boat-floating intellectually.

A great many of us immerse ourselves in extracurricular activities as well, called "extracurricular" though they often apply more closely to our chosen career field than our classes can dream of. Yet, at most, we can only scrape a credit or two out of these endeavors, making us unfairly doubt their educational worth.

The overachiever can be well-lid up with a sense of accomplishment, especially if "success" is achieved, but the non-academic facets of life suffer. Friends, family and lovers are shamefully neglected for the pursuit of the mighty GPA. Diets are dominated by whatever can be consumed in a five minute window of freedom. Leisure activities (and these include reading the paper, watching the news, exercising and SLEEP) elicit a sense of guilt and are perceived as procrastination. And, tragically, those who seem the most "into" their college miss out on a boatload of cultural events. My visits to the art opening, AIDS Quilt, and Jim Carroll presentation put me hours behind on my ?@%&! homework.

If this hectic nature of my existence gets us so bummed, a normal person may inquire, why pursue it? God, I wish I knew. Apparently, someone told us colleges in the 90s have competitive atmospheres, we believed it, and came out with academic guns ablazin'. Don't forget, also, that we are children of the Reagan 80s, where "Make connections! Don't miss your opportunities!" and "Get ahead!" were piped into our collective consciousness. Rarely do you see the overachiever pass on a project or a chance to flex their brainiac muscles.

So what can we do to avoid fat bleeding ulcers at 25? We could take a note from our black sheep cousin the underachiever and flood our cares away with beer, nonchalance, apathy and beer. More realistically, though, the beer should be substituted with coffee (I don't need sleep -- I have Folger's!) and we can continue on our brain-taxing voyage, keeping our heads above water with concentrated yet relaxed schedules and with an eye towards the spring break shores. (Nice metaphor, P.) Actually, I think time management counseling is available here. I'd seek it out myself but I can't fit it in 'til at least next semester.

Socrates would be disappointed

THIS IS A TEST OF YOUR MIND... THIS IS ONLY A TEST. IF THIS WERE ACTUALLY YOUR MIND, YOU MIGHT BE IN TROUBLE!!

Picture it: Athens, 407 BC. It's another dry, hot day in Greece. Light scorches the dusty roads of the great city. A city of enlightenment. A city of culture. A city of... Socrates.

Socrates lived in the fourth century before the birth of Christ. He served in the military, but spent the later years of his life in pursuit of truth. He usually did this by probing with questions about the topic he was pursuing. His method was not to "take sides" in an issue, but rather to neutrally attempt to find the truth in existence. Let's join Socrates in a conversation with a 20th century college student, already in progress.

Socrates: And do you know the truth?

College Student: I think the truth is whatever we make of it.

S: Truth is what I want it to be? How shall I conduct myself?

CS: However you want. That's the beauty of it. Whatever works for you is okay. That's your "truth." What I believe is my "truth."

S: But what of the gods? Do not they give us the conduct by which to live? Is that not the "truth?"

CS: Yeah, but where I come from there's a lot of different religions. Each of them believes in a different God.

S: And which of these Gods is true?

CS: Well, you see, I believe that all religions have truth in them. They're really just different ways of saying the same thing.

S: Do these "Gods" all teach the same things? Or are there some things that are different? Do they set up against one another?

CS: I suppose... some things are different. And I suppose they do conflict on some things...

S: Then, how are you to know which is "right?" If they are different, and if they conflict, how can they both be true?

CS: Well, I guess that's just how we see it. We see it as different, but it's really the same.

S: How can that which conflicts in mind be the same in fact? I would never say that my arm is the same as my leg. If "truth" is that which is correct, and two things are set against each other, then both, surely, cannot be correct -- and then, how can you say that both can be the truth?

CS: Well, Socrates, um. (Scratches head intently) I think I've gotta go.

(Exit, stage right).

And that's how it goes. Or so it seems. I use the example of Socrates to illustrate how some people have inconsistencies in what they think. Now, in the real world, a lot of people are going to have these kinds of inconsistencies and more.

But in the university, I hear it's supposed to be different. People are supposed to be reasonable. People are supposed to think critically. And yet, when it comes to using critical thinking as a skill, people regard it as secondary to what will be on the next test or what is in the next chapter.

To many people, critical thinking and reason is icing on the cake. In reality, they should be the ingredients of the cake itself. But to most people, topics are totally blocked out of their minds.

They refuse to look at them. Truth -- people go through life with blinders on. Albert Einstein said it best: "Few are those who feel with their own hearts and think with their own minds."

Don't believe me? Bring up religion. Pick a spot. Grounds for Thought. Cosmos. A class. The lounge. Work it into the conversation. And see what happens. To me, it's usually one of two things:

1. People avoid the conversation altogether, refusing to speak or listen, and may go so far as to make a reference to people who "shove religion down the throats of others."

2. Everyone is ready to talk about what they think. Sure, they'll sit there quietly and listen to the other person, but they know their turn to speak their piece is coming up. And they end up saying very much, and listening very little.

Now, on the off chance that you get someone who legitimately wants to discuss religion with you, start asking one simple question, and watch what happens. "Why?"

"I believe in God."

"Why?"

"Well, my parents brought me up that way."

"So, why?"

"That's what I was taught to believe was true, so I do."

"So, why? I told you that clouds are made of marshmallow paste, would you believe it?"

"Of course not!"

"Why?"

"Because it's not true."

"And how do you know that?"

"Well... I used my senses, and my reason."

"And so then, if you can apply senses and reason to something as insignificant as a cloud, why wouldn't you even think to apply it to something as important as the creator of the universe?"

Well... um... I think I've got to go. I've got homework to do. Geez, between you and that Socrates guy...."

And so it goes. People claim to want truth. They claim to search for it. They claim to reason. And yet many people I talk to don't care enough about truth to even talk about it. How can that be?

So I'm going to make a challenge. Ask yourself: "Am I a person who wants to objectively examine reality for truth, or am I content with 'what I was taught?'" If you really -- I mean really -- want the truth; then look for it. It won't always fall on your lap. You have to find it. How? By constantly evaluating. Evaluating everything. This information you're told. The people you listen to. What you read and hear. Yourself and your beliefs.

Everything.

Yes, in a way, this article is a shameless plug for the debate that will be on tonight. If you haven't surmised it yet, I'm a Christian. Yes, I believe. I believe it by reasonable evidence. The discussion tonight between Dr. James Sire and Dr. Loren Lomasky about Christianity promises to be fruitful, regardless of who you are or what you believe. Come. Come just to listen legitimately to the other side.

The discussion between Dr. Lomasky and Dr. Sire about Christianity will be in 111 Olscamp Hall tonight, March 6th, at 8 pm. There will be time for questions.

Research on invertebrates to be conducted with funds

A University professor and graduate student have received Wildlife Diversity Grants to research the effects of introduced species on invertebrate populations in Lake Erie.

Jeffrey Miner, assistant professor, and Timothy Stewart have received more than $8,000 collectively in funding for two separate projects.

"What we're mainly interested in is how these exotic species will interact with a community once they're introduced," Miner said.

Miner's research involves the introduction of the round gobi. A round gobi is a small freshwater fish believed to have originated in Asia.

Stewart's research centers on the zebra mussel. The research first captured national news in 1989 because of its ability to clog pipes running from freshwater bodies.

"I'm more concerned as to how the zebra mussel will affect the abundance of invertebrates in Erie," Stewart said. "There will probably be a community shift in the level of zooplankton from the surface to shallow, rocky waters where the zebra mussels feed. It's too early now to tell the exact effects."

The round gobi also thrives in shallow waters, and feeds on the zebra mussel. Miner believes 95 percent of the gobi's diet is the zebra mussel. This balance would seemingly indicate little effect to existing species, but research conducted by Miner and Stewart show otherwise.

The gobi has proven to be vicious and protective over its rocky feeding grounds that are shared with crayfish, which is the favorite food of several game fish in Lake Erie. In large numbers, the round gobi could starve out the crayfish.

"If large and small mouth bass eat the gobi, then there's no problem," Miner said. "Right now, fisherman fishing for perch are catching an abundance of them because they like worms. You can drop in a line and catch up to 25 an hour. Whether this means they've starved perch out is too early to say." Miner said he would like to possibly continue the project for a decade.

"We're getting good data, and we can answer [many] questions about the gobi," Miner said. "I'm only funded for one year, but I'd like to continue research for maybe ten. Research breeds more interest and we explore further."

The effects of the gobi and zebra mussel are not all harmful, according to Stewart.

"The zebra mussel is a filter feeder, and actually cleans the water. It also discharges what it doesn't eat packed together in a ball," Stewart said. "These are very nutritious to certain invertebrate life."

Scientists believe the gobi and zebra mussel were probably carried in the ballast water of European ships. They are introduced when this water is pumped from the ships.

Parents to get $1 million settlement

St. Louis-based crib company to pay compensation for 1993 infant death

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Parents of an infant who accidentally strangled himself between the mattress and side rail of his crib will receive $1 million as settlement in a lawsuit against the crib's manufacturer.

The settlement was reached Monday between the St. Louis-based Welsh Co. and Devin Matz and Julie Stanfield, the parents of 5-month-old Billy Matz of Cuyahoga Falls.

The settlement occurred as a U.S. District Court jury that ruled last week in favor of the parents was about to begin deliberating damages.

The boy's mother found him hanging from his crib in 1993. A bolt on the crib had come loose, allowing the side rail to separate from the footboard and letting him slip down until his head become trapped.

The couple divorced after the accident and decided to sue the company to publicize the danger associated with cribs, Stanfield said.

Gary Hermann, the attorney who represented Welsh, said sympathy was a factor in the jury's decision. "It's unfortunate because the emotionally charged nature of the case shifted the burden from the plaintiff to the defendant," he said.

Hermann contended the bolt that failed was not part of the original hardware. He said the crib met industry safety standards.

A woman answering the telephone at the company's St. Louis office Tuesday said the company had no comment on the settlement. The woman would not give her name.

Crime takes toll in Clinton Township

John Seewer
The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — The grocery store clerk didn't need to see the statistics. He already knew he lived and worked in a dangerous neighborhood, a small, urban township with an alarming rate of violent crime.

He has seen the violence firsthand in Franklin County's Clinton Township: A co-worker was shot and killed during a robbery attempt in August, and late last fall, the store was robbed twice in one week.

"This happens all the time around here," he said. "It's mostly the kids. They have so many guns."

Clinton Township had the highest rate of violent crime among Ohio police departments that reported to the FBI in 1994 — 37.8 violent crimes per 1,000 people. That was the fourth-highest rate nationwide among agencies covering communities of 2,500 to 10,000 people.

The FBI classifies violent crimes as murder, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault. It estimated that 4.9 violent crimes were committed in Ohio in 1994 for every 1,000 people. The national average was 7.1. Statewide figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Twenty-one Ohio police departments reported no violent crime for all 12 months of 1994. Each department covers an area of less than 10,000 people.

Other cities that had Ohio's highest and lowest rates of violent crime per 1,000 people were:

■ Big cities: Cleveland, 15.3; Akron, 9.6.

■ 50,000 to 100,000 population: Mansfield, 25.0; Cleveland

■ 10,000 to 25,000: Alliance, 8.2; Ashland, 0.1.

Violent crime in 1995 decreased in Mansfield, stayed about the same in Alliance, and increased in Lima and Cleveland, according to police department statistics.

It also increased in Clinton Township, from 177 reports of violent crime in 1994 to 239 last year. The township's violent crime rate jumped to 51.0, based on 1994 population. The population would not be expected to change significantly in one year.

The township, a low- to middle-class neighborhood of 4,600 people, is surrounded by the east side of Columbus. Most residents live in apartment complexes or small, older one-story homes.

It is filled with bars, used-car lots and fast-food restaurants.

Crime has taken its toll on some of the businesses. The market where the employee was shot and killed is installing bulletproof glass around the cashier's stand. It also has an alarm connected to the police department.

UAW strikes at two GM brake plants in Dayton

James Hannah
The Associated Press

DAYTON — About 3,000 workers at two General Motors Corp. brake plants went on strike today after failing to resolve a contract dispute with the automaker by a union deadline.

Members of United Auto Workers Local 696 walked off the job shortly after 10 a.m. The union had said it would strike if talks did not resolve differences with the company by then.

At issue is outsourcing — the production of parts by outside plants or companies — that could result in lost jobs at the plants. Union leaders have said GM has issued outsourcing notices that could affect 125 jobs.

Worker health and safety also are issues. The union has said it is not satisfied with the company's efforts to determine how workers are injured in jobs with repetitive motion.

Local 696 President Joe Hasenjager said both sides negotiated through the night but there was little progress. He said it could be a long strike.

"They just want to continue to take jobs away from this plant, away from this community," he said of GM. "We're doing what we have to do today."

Another bargaining session is scheduled for Wednesday.

Alan Dawes, vice president and general manager of GM's Delphi Chassis Division, said the company would continue to bargain.

"For the sake of our employees, customers and community, it is critical that we resolve this situation as soon as possible," he said in a statement.

"However, it is imperative that any settlement not jeopardize the competitiveness of these plants and hence the job security of our employees."

Local 696, which represents workers at the two GM Delphi Chassis Systems plants, has been operating under the union's national agreement, which expires in September. The contract allows the union to terminate the contract and strike under certain circumstances.

The plants make brake pads, boosters, master cylinders, calipers and other parts for anti-lock and conventional brake systems. The brakes are used in the assembly of a variety of GM and other vehicles.

Striking workers walked off the job and headed immediately to picket lines outside the plant gates.

"Nobody wants to go but it's the necessary thing to do if we want to keep these jobs," said worker Steve Jackson, 47, of Dayton.

Steve Mowry, 45, of Wilmington, agreed.

"We do what we got to do," he said. "We're talking about jobs, good-paying jobs. Hopefully we can keep them alive for our kids, who are going to need jobs later on."

Workers at the two plants went on strike two years ago, idling five GM assembly plants.

Building resident charged with arson

The Associated Press

IRONTON, Ohio — A resident of an apartment building was charged with setting a fire in the six-story structure in Ironton in southern Ohio.

Eight people suffered smoke inhalation and were treated at hospitals and released.

Meanwhile, authorities on Tuesday were investigating the cause of a fire that destroyed two storage buildings in Lancaster, in central Ohio.

Ironton police Sgt. James Carey said Daryl Brown, 42, who lived at the Marting apartment building, was charged with aggravated arson, vandalism and inducing panic.

Brown was being held Tuesday at the Lawrence County jail in Ironton, 120 miles south of Columbus. Arraignment is scheduled Wednesday in Ironton Municipal Court.

Brown's apartment was gutted in the fire Monday night, and smoke damaged all six floors of the hotel, acting chief Capt. Jim Riedel said. Damage was estimated at $50,000.

There are 25 to 30 apartments in the brick building, which was built about 1920, Riedel said.

All of the residents were evacuated, although the number of evacuees could not be determined, he said.

Residents will be allowed to return Wednesday to retrieve belongings. The Red Cross was helping them find temporary homes.

In Lancaster, about 30 miles southeast of Columbus, fire on Monday destroyed a Lancaster City Schools storage building and a farm feed storage building.

Two firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation.

Casino Queen funds police force

Frank Fisher
The Associated Press

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. -- If hell has a police department to punish errant officers, it probably looks a lot like the East St. Louis force did for most of the past 15 years.

Paydays were erratic, with officers going as much as six weeks without a paycheck. Hiring was frozen for a decade. The patrol fleet was so broken-down that police sometimes had to ride three to a car. Officers would have to duck into phone booths to call headquarters because their cars didn't have working radios.

"A lot of times, we couldn't catch thieves because our top speed was 50 mph," said Sgt. Lionel Settles, a 25-year veteran of the police force in this impoverished city of 38,000. "You go any faster than that, and your car would start sputtering."

Today, the police department has new cars, new guns, new blood and a new attitude, thanks largely to an influx of cash from a riverboat casino that opened on the Mississippi in 1993.

The mostly black community, which once despised the police almost as much as they did the crack dealers and prostitutes who haunted the streets, is giving officers another chance.

"We used to call the police, and you might not even see them," said Darlene Jones, a neighborhood organizer whose son was shot and wounded by a gang near her home three years ago. "We're trying to trust the police now."

East St. Louis' murder rate has been dropping steadily since

The Associated Press

Although times have been frustrating in the past for the East St. Louis Police Department, obtaining money from riverboat gambling has helped. The police department now has new cars, new guns, new blood and a new attitude.

In the same period, the number of working police cars rose from seven to 54, the most Police Chief Isadore Chambers can recall the department having since he

Authorities attempt to match DNA samples in rape victim's womb

The Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. -- Authorities have extracted a DNA sample from the womb of a comatose woman who was raped and impregnated and now they are attempting to match it against samples obtained from suspects.

A former nurse's aide accused of fondling another patient at the nursing home where the woman was raped 6 1/2 months ago has refused to provide blood voluntarily, the Democrat and Chronicle reported today, quoting unidentified sources.

Police discovered a blood stain on a laboratory coat that John Horace was believed to have worn and technicians are trying to obtain a DNA sample from it, the newspaper said.

Police say several employees and ex-employees of the Westfall Health Care Center in suburban Brighton are being investigated for the rape of a 29-year-old patient who has been in a coma since a 1985 car crash. They refused to say whether the suspects include Horace.

Last month, Horace, 52, pleaded guilty to unrelated charges that he posed as a sex therapist. A judge ruled that if Horace is convicted of sexually abusing a 49-year-old patient at the nursing home where he worked briefly as a nurse's aide last year, his sentence will be increased from 16 weekends in jail to six months.

Horace began working at the center in August and was fired after a physically disabled patient accused him of fondling her in September.

Police said medical technicians obtained a DNA sample from the amniotic fluid surrounding the fetus and blood samples from more than 30 potential suspects. It could take months to definitively test the samples.

the event," Albrecht said.

"I think people who make the stereotype about Generation X do not see who's doing the work," Albrecht said. "People on campus do volunteer."

Stewart said students found out about the Quilt and the volunteer opportunities through posters, announcements and various organizations. The Quilt was open for 30 hours total and it required a lot of people to give of themselves, she said.

Volunteers had to go to one of four training sessions for an hour and a half and had to read a packet of information that talked about the Quilt and the different jobs and their functions, Stewart said. Students were able to choose their activities and had to meet with the chairpersons of their subcommittees.

"I just want to say thank you to all of them."

CRIME

spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Sgt. Mike Haley, a 20-year veteran of the township police department, doesn't dispute that there is a crime problem in the area, six miles northeast of downtown Columbus. But he thinks it would be unfair to compare the township with other parts of Ohio.

"I think that rating is a little misleading because we're really in a city of 1 million people," Haley said, referring to metropolitan Columbus. "Robbers don't care about jurisdictions."

During 1994, there were 57 robberies reported in the township. There were 42 reported last year.

But aggravated assaults increased, from 113 reported in 1994 to 194 last year. Authorities say most of the trouble usually starts with alcohol. Thirty-one places sell liquor in the 1.2-square-mile township.

Assaults are the most common violent crime. Of the 49,107 violent crimes reported to the FBI across the state in 1994, nearly half -- 24,276 -- were aggravated assaults. There were 19,575 robberies, 4,643 rapes and 613 murders.

But the figures are incomplete because more than one-fourth of Ohio's 603 law enforcement agencies did not report crime to the FBI. Reporting is voluntary.

Most states, however, reported at or near 100 percent. Only Montana, Kansas, Indiana, New Mexico, Tennessee and Mississippi were below Ohio in reporting.

Report claims children need AIDS education

Lauran Neergaard
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Teen-agers are contracting the AIDS virus at an average of more than one an hour, and the White House again urged the nation Tuesday to teach them how to protect themselves.

To some disappointed young people, the report and its media fanfare were just more government talk and no action.

"This report isn't really doing something for youth," said Lam Duckim, 24, of Washington, who has the HIV virus. "There is a need for accountability."

Between 40,000 and 80,000 Americans become infected with the AIDS virus each year, and one in four is a teen-ager. Based on those sobering statistics, President Clinton asked the White House Office of AIDS Policy to talk to young people to find solutions.

The office's report echoes what many scientists and AIDS activists have said for years: Strong AIDS education is a must for children, so that if they later have sex or experiment with drugs, they know how to protect themselves.

"Kids are dying because adults are arguing about what to tell them about AIDS," said Miguel Bustos, 25, of San Francisco. He was asked to help write the report because as a teen, he organized student AIDS education.

"Teach the children. That's our message," he said.

Most American school systems provide some AIDS education. Many systems' policies prohibit discussion of sexual intercourse, homosexuality, bisexuality and condom use, the report said.

Conservative groups have criticized AIDS awareness campaigns. They contend advising teens that condoms can prevent HIV infection condones teen-age sexual activity. They charge that some education programs promote homosexuality and condone drug use by discussing AIDS prevention techniques.

The White House report said: "Discussion of the facts concerning such matters is not inconsistent with also encouraging abstinence or delayed sexual activity."

It recommended that young people with HIV be used in campaigns to tell their peers how to protect themselves, because teens often tune out adults.

While the White House report mentioned homosexuality, it never recommended how to reach gay teens, criticized the Los Angeles Gay & Lesbian Center. The center said 63 percent of AIDS cases among men under 25 are due to unsafe sex with other men.

"However well intended, the report's recommendations ... turn a blind eye to gay and bisexual youth," said center director Lorri Jean.

And young people in the audience when the report was issued had some tough questions: Will the White House ensure that states follow the report's recommendations? Will it force school systems to provide condom education and discuss homosexuality? Or provide money for student-run peer-education programs?

AIDS Policy Director Patricia Fleming responded that the report was "a call to action." She acknowledged it broke little new ground but said it marked the first time the government has spotlighted teen-agers' needs.

Senator won't seek re-election

Matt Brown
The Associated Press

Republican says she can't adequately represent Utah

SALT LAKE CITY — Rep. Enid Greene Waldholtz, the target of crushing criticism about the mishandling of her campaign and personal finances, announced today she will not seek re-election this year.

In a statement faxed to news organizations, the first-term Republican, who has blamed her problems on her estranged husband, said she could not adequately clear her name and represent the people of Utah in Congress.

Her announcement brings to 43 the number of House members who have announced they will not seek re-election. Sixteen are Republicans.

Public opinion polls in her 2nd Congressional District have shown sharply reduced support since Waldholtz's problems became public late last year, and there were calls made for her to hand back the seat many believed she won through a last-minute ad blitz paid for through illegal campaign financing.

Questioned about the source of the money at the time, Mrs. Waldholtz would say only that she and her husband "had been blessed." She has since acknowledged that the money was funneled into the campaign in apparent violation of federal election law.

In the congresswoman's more recent account, she said her stock trader father, Forrest Greene, gave her and her husband $4 million with the understanding that he would be repaid at least half of that amount with proceeds from property Waldholtz claimed to own in Pennsylvania, but did not.

Mrs. Waldholtz said she believed her campaign contribution came from that asset swap and a nonexistent $5 million trust fund Waldholtz also claimed to have. It turned out the bulk of her personal campaign donation actually came from her father, she said.

Federal election law prohibits individuals from contributing more than $1,000 per candidate per election. Candidates and their spouses also are prohibited from donating more than half of their combined assets.

Former staffers, including Mrs. Waldholtz's 1994 campaign manager, David Harmer, said they repeatedly warned her about possible financial irregularities.

Instead of heeding their warnings, she got angry, said Harmer, who resigned in April as the congresswoman's chief of staff.

It wasn't until after her husband disappeared for six days in November that Mrs. Waldholtz acknowledged the extent of her financial problems and filed for divorce.

Several groups have since called for her resignation, including government watchdog group Public Citizen, the Utah Democratic Party and former campaign managers for Shepherd.

A former corporate attorney for computer software manufacturer Novell Inc., Mrs. Waldholtz said she became involved in politics because she was "idealistic and believed in my country."

POLICE

pumping $10 million a year into the coffers of the once-bankrupt city, the police budget has been doubled to $4 million, Mayor Gordon Bush said.

Money from the riverboat and from a federal COP grant — for Community-Oriented Policing — has let the city hire about 40 new officers. There are 87 on the force now. And long-delayed promotions and pay raises are finally trickling in.

In 1977, a consulting firm recommended the whole police force be disbanded. At one point five years ago, the city ran out of gas for its police cars. And in 1990, a state panel took over the city's finances. It is still in charge.

Today, a major emphasis is on foot patrols and building rapport in neighborhoods and housing projects. Residents can also attend a "citizen academy," where they learn how to help police solve crimes.

The department has a Delta Team of commandos who specialize in storming crack houses. Cooperation among federal, state and local law enforcement has never been better, Chambers said.

The average age of an East St. Louis police officer in 1989 was 46.

BG to bang bodies with bigger Broncos

Pat Murphy
The BG News

Western Michigan really does live up to its name. The Broncos pound opponents constantly during a game, tossing the enemy around in the corners like a mechanical bull on steroids.

Bowling Green saw how effective the Broncos are with that strategy when WMU defeated BG 4-0 on Jan. 20. WMU consistently dumped the puck into the Falcon end and proceeded to separate BG players from the puck by slamming their bodies into the boards.

The Broncos will likely look to exploit this advantage when the teams meet in the first round of the Central Collegiate Hockey Association playoffs beginning this Friday in Kalamazoo, Mich.

The series may come down to two different offensive styles butting heads with each other, Western Michigan's dump-and-chase versus Bowling Green's playmaking, passing offense.

The Falcons are a free skating team that relies on open ice rushes by puck carriers and player movement around the net. After the last game, Bronco head coach Bill Wilkinson said his team had to slow Falcon center Curtis Fry in order to limit the Falcons' offensive chances.

Fry is paramount in this series. Over the last eight games he has scored five goals and added 10 assists and finished the regular season as the fifth overall leading scorer in the league. He is playing his best hockey of the season at the most opportune time.

His ability to carry the puck and get the Bronco defenseman to back off the blueline will be crucial. If he can gain the blueline on a consistent basis shot opportunities will be created for linemates Brett Punchard and Jeff Herman.

Fry's line and the line of Mike Hall, Jason Clark and Dan Price should be able to play at an even level with Western Michigan's top two lines.

The Broncos third line will be the line that gives the Falcons the most difficulty. It causes problems because the three players on it tower over the three Falcons that may be paired against them.

Kyle Millar, 6 feet 3 inches and 210 pounds, was third on the team in goals with 19 and scored 39 points. Joel Irving, 6 feet 4 inches and 200 pounds, scored seven times this season. Carlin Nordstrom, 6 feet 2 inches and 205 pounds, also scored seven times this year.

Now, the Falcons third line: Dave Faulkner, 5 feet 7 inches 175 pounds, Brad Holzinger 6 feet 185 pounds and Dale Crombeen 5 feet 11 inches and 190 pounds.

WMU's third lines averages 205 pounds and stands at an average height of 6 feet 3 inches tall. The Falcons' third line weighs in at 183 pounds and gives up almost five inches to the Bronco line.

The size discrepancy becomes more significant over two straight games and even more important over three games, which is a possibility if the teams split their first two games.

The Bronco third line will try to wear down the Falcons by dumping the puck deep into the BG zone and utilizing their hard checking style. BG must be able to control the Bronco forecheck and carry the puck out of its zone.

If the Falcons can play the series at center ice instead of along the boards they will control the play. But if Western Michigan is given the opportunity to assert its size, the Falcons' season may end in Kalamazoo.

Redskins devastate sputtering Falcons, 81-53 in quarterfinals

Scott Brown
The BG News

OXFORD — Just as it's season has gone, Bowling Green started strong and then wilted away down the stretch Tuesday in the quarterfinals of the MAC Tournament.

The Falcons played inspired basketball early, but Miami proved to have too much as the Redskins controlled a run-away 81-53 win before 5,121 at Millett Hall.

Miami advances to the MAC Final Four at the SeaGate Center in Toledo Friday, where they will take on Toledo, an upset winner over Western Michigan Tuesday.

Bowling Green bows out at 14-13 on the season, 9-10 in MAC play.

The Falcons controlled a 24-19 lead with 7:00 left in the first half, but the Redskins went on a 16-4 run to take a seven-point advantage at halftime.

Miami then held off the Falcons in second half on their way to an easy win.

Landon Hackim had 29 points to lead the Redskins on 8 of 9 shooting. Damon Frierson, a big part of the Redskins first-half run, had 19 points and Devin Davis added 12.

Jay Larranaga led the Falcons with 19 points. Anthony Stacey had 11 points in the first eight minutes of the game only to finish with just 16. Antonio Daniels added 12 points against a stifling Miami defense.

"I thought we lost it the last five minutes of the first half," said BG head coach Jim Larranaga.

The Redskins love to run in the friendly confines of their own gymnasium, and they did so during the decisive first-half run.

Frierson, who had the winning bucket with less than a second to go to beat BG in a game at Anderson Arena last Wednesday, scored six points to key the stretch. A conventional three-point play on a baseline drive allowed the Redskins to draw even with BG at 26 all at the 5:15 mark.

Jermaine Henderson then provided a momentum-turning three pointer, giving the Redskins a lead they would not relinquish.

The Falcons would go on to miss eight of their final nine field-goal attempts as Frierson hit two buckets in a row and Ira Newble brought the Millett crowd to its feet with a dunk off the break just before halftime.

"I think it did, a lot," said Stacey of the Redskins run, draining the life from the Falcons. "We're doing great till that point, then we turned the ball over a couple of times and all of a sudden in the second half, we're down by seven."

"We got a little frustrated in the second half. Things hadn't gone the way we thought they would go."

Daniels scored the first four points of the second half, pulling Falcons back within three points.

Miami proceeded to score the next 16 points to put the game away as BG missed six field goals in a row to go along with four turnovers.

During one span in the second half, BG was without a field goal for 9:27. The Falcons started the game 10 of 17 from the field, but finished just 19 of 38 for 39 percent.

Four elected to baseball Hall of Fame

Ben Walker
The Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Earl Weaver, who managed Baltimore into four World Series, and Jim Bunning, a 224-game winner, were among four people elected to the Hall of Fame today by the veterans committee.

Negro Leagues pitcher Bill Foster and turn-of-the-century manager Ned Hanlon also were chosen by the 14-member committee.

The new inductees will be enshrined at Cooperstown, N.Y., on Aug. 4. Hall officials said this year's induction ceremonies might not have been held if no one had been chosen, but the veterans found suitable candidates two months after the members of the Baseball Writers Association of America failed to elect anyone.

Weaver led the Orioles to a record of 1,480-1,060, and won six AL East championships. His teams had only one losing season in 17 years.

Bunning, now a member of Congress from his native Kentucky, was 224-184 and in 1964 pitched the seventh of baseball's 14 perfect games. He was elected in his second year before the veterans after missing by four votes in the writers' election in 1988.

Free throws doom BG women, 82-77 in OT

Jeremy Yohe and Steve Wildman
The BG News

ATHENS, Ohio — Despite a career high 26 points from Charlotte Jones and 23 points from Sara Puthoff, Ohio was able to pull off a 82-77 overtime win at the Convocation Center in front of 4,216 screaming Bobcat fans.

Freethrows crippled the Falcons, who shot 6-16 from the foul line, thus allowing the Bobcats to hang close late in the second half.

Bowling Green was a dismal 0-5 from the foul line in the last six minutes and missed the front end of the one-and-one four times.

"It's too bad, we still had a chance to rectify things after we turned over the ball," BG head coach Jaci Clark said.

"We even had the game down to one more basket or one more stop and we didn't get that done. Foul shooting has been a nemesis all year long and it hurt us tonight."

Jones went on an amazing 12-16 from the floor and snatched 14 boards. Jones was unstoppable in the second half scoring seven of BG's first 20 points after intermission.

Puthoff found her way back to shooting behind the arch going 3-5. She hit back-to-back three pointers mid-way through the second half to push the BG lead to 57-50.

"[Jones and Puthoff] had inspired play. Sara had been struggling from the field and she really stepped up tonight," Clark said. "The same thing for Charlotte. She is our workhorse."

The Falcons looked to have the game in control after Ohio's Barb Grbac committed her fifth foul on Bridget Andrews. Andrews sunk both foul shots to put BG in the lead 71-76 with 3:10 left to go. From there Ohio's Renee Robare took control defensively causing havoc for BG ball handlers. At 71-67 Robare forced a turnover and scored on a drive to the hoop with 40 seconds to go. With ten second to go in regulation, Andrews missed the front end of a one-and-one and Ohio's Natalie Britt got the ball and tied the game over Puthoff, 71-71.

Director of player personnel and development Nick Beverley added head coach to his list of duties at his press conference Tuesday morning.

Leafs fire Burns, bring in Beverley

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Pat Burns was fired as coach of the Toronto Maple Leafs and replaced, at least for now, by Nick Beverley, the team's director of player personnel.

General manager Cliff Fletcher confirmed Monday night that he had fired Burns, who had a year left on a guaranteed contract that will pay him $850,000 next season. "Pat did not quit," Fletcher told the Toronto Star.

Toronto has lost eight straight and is 3-16-3 since the All-Star break to drop into a tie with Winnipeg for seventh place in the Western Conference.

Burns, who at first denied he had been let go, said the firing was not a pleasant scene.

"You could feel the strain on everybody, especially on me," Burns told CFRB, a Toronto radio station, this morning. "We sort of sat there, almost in tears both of us when he did it. And I said, 'Cliff, I understand. It's not your fault. That's the way it has to be.'"

"He was a great man to work for. It was a lot of fun. It's a great organization. But right now we're going nowhere."

The team called a news conference for 10 a.m. EST at Maple Leaf Gardens.

Beverley will be behind the bench when the Leafs play the New Jersey Devils on Wednesday night. He is expected to remain as coach on an interim basis.

The former NHL defenseman was the Los Angeles Kings' general manager in 1992-93 when the club reached the Stanley Cup final.

Burns, 43, is a burly ex-cop who is one of only two coaches to win coach-of-the-year honors with different teams. Vancouver Canucks' Pat Quinn is the other.

Gretzky's home debut helps clear cobwebs

R.B. Fallstrom
The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — A little banged-up but accompanied by rousing applause at every move, Wayne Gretzky made his home debut with the St. Louis Blues on Tuesday night.

Gretzky came through his morning skate smiling and then passed a final medical test that cleared him to play against the Florida Panthers.

A sellout crowd greeted him with a standing ovation when he stepped on the ice and again with even more thunderous cheers when he was the final starter introduced, a reception that visibly affected hockey's scoring king.

Gretzky sustained a mild concussion when he was elbowed in the face by Edmonton's Kelly Buchberger on Sunday, and there was some concern he might be in street clothes for his scheduled home debut.

About an hour after he left the ice and about seven hours before the Blues played the Panthers, he got the good news.

Not that general manager and coach Mike Keenan had doubted it. Keenan said he didn't watch Gretzky closely in practice.

"I didn't have to," Keenan said. "He said he was ready to play before he went out, so that's good enough for me. He looks healthy and ready to go."

Linemate Brett Hull drove Gretzky to an undisclosed location to get medical clearance. Keenan said the tests, which he called "some kind of neurological evaluation," were not extensive.

The hit knocked Gretzky unconscious, but he said the headaches had subsided by Monday night and he also joked he felt "99 percent" — his jersey number. Acquired from the Los Angeles Kings a week ago, the only thing he was battling Tuesday was a case of nerves.

"From that point I'm feeling a little bit dazed, but not by any means hurting at all," Gretzky said. "I'm so ecstatic to be here and so thrilled to be part of this that right now it's all kind of a blur."

He wasn't worried about living up to the fans' expectations. Soon after the deal, remaining tickets for the last nine home games nearly sold out and Keenan compared the situation to Michael Jordan's return to the Chicago Bulls last season.

"One thing for me, since I've been 6 years old, for some reason I've always been under a microscope and always had a great deal of pressure," Gretzky said. "I'm nervous and excited, but it's not the first time I've been through this."

Ex-Cowboy Jones inks deal with Rams

Barry Wilner
The Associated Press

Dallas lost its fourth defensive starter when linebacker Robert Jones agreed to a five-year deal with the Rams worth more than $10 million. A $3 million signing bonus sold Jones on St. Louis.

In the past two weeks, cornerback Larry Brown, the Super Bowl MVP, and defensive tackle Russell Maryland signed with Oakland, and linebacker Dixon Edwards signed with Minnesota.

Jones' departure leaves restricted free agent Darrin Smith as the lone returning starter at linebacker for the Cowboys.

Also Monday, as linebacker Cornelius Bennett was finalizing his deal with Atlanta, the Buffalo Bills agreed to a deal with their other free agent linebacker, Mark Maddox.

Maddox will sign a three-year contract with the Bills today, according to his agent, Keith Schulefand.

A five-year veteran, Maddox became Buffalo's starter at right inside linebacker in 1993 and had 81 tackles in 1994. He made 34 tackles last year before sustaining a season-ending knee injury against Cleveland in the fifth game.

Bennett, a five-time Pro Bowl linebacker, agreed to a $13.6 million, four-year deal with the Falcons last week. He signed it Monday and will receive a $5 million bonus.

The Washington Redskins signed free agent guard Bob Dahl, who spent the last four seasons with the Cleveland Browns, to a $6 million deal for three years, with a $1.8 million signing bonus.

Dahl will be the likely starter at left guard, a spot held by Ray Brown, who left for the San Francisco 49ers.

"I think one my priorities was getting into a good situation I could fit in with," Dahl said. "I'm used to being a starter and that's what I intend to do, and I think that's what they'll have me do. There's a pretty good fit there."

Miami acquired offensive tackle James Brown from the New York Jets for a fifth-round draft choice in 1997.

Brown played in 15 games in 1995 for the Jets.

Steelers won't try to lasso Oakland's Hoss

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jeff Hostetler will not be trading in the black-and-silver for the black-and-gold.

The Pittsburgh Steelers abandoned plans to sign the Oakland Raiders quarterback, leaving either Mike Tomczak, Kordell Stewart or Jim Miller to replace Neil O'Donnell, who signed with the Jets Thursday.

"Right now, everybody feels the players we have are better than what's available," Steelers football operations director Tom Donahoe said.

The 1996 training camp could be the site of spirited competition among journeyman backup Tomczak, Miller and Stewart, who lined up at wide receiver in 1995.

"Even though they're young, they've made progress," Donahoe said about Miller and Stewart. "And we still have a veteran in Mike who has started games and finished games. They know the system, and the coaches like them and for now, we feel confident with the situation."

There are "a lot worse scenarios in this league than we have," offensive coordinator Chan Gailey said.

He said he expects Tomczak to be the front-runner and Miller and Stewart to try to unseat him.

The Raiders would have the right to match any offer for Hostetler, who lives in nearby Morgantown, W.Va., and the Steelers are convinced the Raiders would do so.

"When a player has that right of first refusal, all you're doing is signing a guy for somebody else," Donahoe said.

The Steelers might try to sign Hostetler if the Raiders pursue another quarterback, such as Jeff George of the Falcons. But that is not believed to be likely.

The Steelers plan to concentrate on signing players entering the last year of their contracts, including linebackers Greg Lloyd and Chad Brown and cornerback Rod Woodson.

The Steelers have also been talking to Carwell Gardner, a free agent fullback recently cut by Buffalo, as a possible replacement for the waived John L. Williams.

The Falcons finished the season having lost four of their last five games.

BG had come out of the locker room sizzling to start the game. After hitting only three of its first nine shots, the Falcons hit seven of their next eight as they built the lead as high as six points. Stacey hit his first five shots to get the Falcons going, but the Redskins controlled from there.

Bowling Green has now lost nine games in a row at Millett Hall, and seven in a row against the Redskins.

"I looked up to the clock and there was ten seconds left, and I knew they were in a situation where they could not foul. They did not want to put us at the line," Britt said. "We were getting good drives off them all night and I figured the closer that I get to the basket is the best shot I'm going to get. I thank God it fell."

In the overtime Ohio turned to Britt and center Gwyneth Ballard. Ballard scored seven of her 13 point in OT and Britt carried most of the load of the Bobcats with 24 points.

With 1:30 left to go in OT, Britt grabbed her own miss and scored on the put back to put OU up for good at 78-77.

Following Britt's basket, Puthoff was sent to the line for a one-and-one with 1:16 left in OT. Uncharacteristically, the 73 percent foul shooter let the first foul shot short.

While the Falcons were struggling from the foul line, the Bobcats had little trouble converting foul shots into easy points. OU shot 14-18 and made all three of their foul shots in overtime.

throughout the year," said Marsha Reall, Bobcat head coach. "They usually shoot the best foul shots in the tightest games."

BG's Michelle Terry rounded out the double digit scoring of the Falcons with 11 points and eight rebounds. Andrews added nine points and five boards.

But it was OU's balance in scoring (five players in double digits) that propelled the Bobcats to the MAC Final Four at the Seagate Center in Toledo.

Chrissy Billitter and Puthoff were honored by the MAC. Billitter was named to the all-freshman team and Puthoff was named to the MAC all-academic team.

Indians' Burnitz hopes to fit in

The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. -- Jeremy Burnitz is a realist. A spot in the Cleveland Indians' starting lineup, he understands, is out of the question.

"I see my situation exactly as it is," said Burnitz, a candidate for one of Cleveland's two openings for outfielders. "I'm on a team whose starting outfield went to the All-Star Game last year. I'm out of options, and I'm trying to win one of the backup jobs."

Burnitz spent parts of the 1993 and '94 seasons with the New York Mets, and he seemed to have a very bright future after hitting 13 home runs in 86 games in '93. But he also gained recognition for his run-ins with manager Dallas Green.

"That is ancient history," Burnitz said. "A lot happened, but it's not something I care to talk about."

Now, at age 26, he's simply trying to latch on in the big leagues. He's competing with Wayne Kirby, Dave Gallagher, Brian Giles and Tom Marsh for the two openings in the Cleveland outfield.

Kirby is a favorite for one of them, because he has a guaranteed contract worth $425,000.

"I'm not anticipating anything," Burnitz said. "I believe if I was put on waivers at the end of spring training, someone would take me. A lot of people have seen me play in Buffalo last year and in the National League."

The Indians know they'll probably lose Burnitz if they put him through waivers, and that means he has a good chance of winning the other outfield job -- even though he and Kirby are both left-handed hitters.

"He's got power, he can run and play all three outfield positions," general manager John Hart said. "And he has a pedigree. He was the Mets' No. 1 pick in 1990."

Burnitz, who came to the Cleveland organization in a 1994 trade with the Mets, hit .284 with 26 doubles, 19 homers and 85 RBIs at Class AAA Buffalo last year. In nine games with the Indians, he hit .571.

"I was having a solid year," he said. "On other teams, I may have gotten a chance to get to the big leagues sooner."

Leadoff spot worries Reds rookie manager

The Associated Press

PLANT CITY, Fla. -- Cincinnati Reds manager Ray Knight is still wondering who his leadoff hitter will be this season.

Although it's early in spring training, Knight would like to get that decided so he can go on to other matters -- like who's going to play third base, left field and center.

"I don't have a clear picture of that at all," Knight said of the leadoff situation. "That's the thing I'm concerned most about."

Vince Coleman, a likely starter in left, is a leadoff candidate. So is Curtis Goodwin, if he wins the job in center field.

Right now, Goodwin and Mike Kelly are the Reds' only bona fide candidates for center field, Knight said.

"That's pretty clear for me," he said, closing off speculation about Steve Gibralter and Eric Davis.

And whatever the final outfield combination is, it won't include Kelly and Gibralter at the same time.

"You can't play them both in

"I don't have a clear picture of that at all. That's the thing I'm concerned most about."

Ray Knight

the outfield because neither one is a true speed guy," Knight said.

That's more important to Knight on offense than defense, because he plans to emphasize base stealing.

As far as batting leadoff goes, Knight still favors Goodwin.

"Vince has started and stopped, but Goodwin is starting to swing the bat the way we think he can," Knight said Monday. "He hit the ball hard today, but we need to see more of that. That's why it's the position I'm most concerned about right now."

Jose Rijo continues to work well ahead of the Reds' rehab plans following major elbow surgery in August. Rijo pitched two innings in a "B" game against the Detroit Tigers on Tuesday, walking one, striking out one and holding the Tigers hitless.

Bucs' Christiansen auditions for place in Pirates' rotation

The Associated Press

BRADENTON, Fla. -- The Pirates are treating Jason Christiansen like a starting pitcher.

He's on a starter's schedule, and his only appearance was as a starter.

But appearance belies reality.

Although a candidate to make the Pirates' five-man rotation, Christiansen, 26, could be back in the bullpen when the regular season starts. He led the Pirates with 63 relief appearances as a rookie last season.

"Don't read too much into the fact that we've given him a start," manager Jim Leyland said. "Right now, it's still early and we've got 27 pitchers in camp. We're looking at everybody."

"At this point, all I can say about Jason Christiansen is that he's going to be on this staff this season. What role he'll be in, I'm not sure yet."

"It's like I told my pitchers a long time ago about roles, the only rolls I know are the ones you put butter on."

Christiansen, 1-3 with a 4.15 ERA last season, made his first spring start Monday against Toronto and allowed one hit and one run in two innings.

"I was a little overanxious in the first inning, trying to get three outs with one pitch," Christiansen said. "But then I settled down and was OK."

"It really felt weird coming into a game where you knew you were going to pitch after being used to pitching in relief. And it felt strange to have as much time as you needed in the bullpen to get loose before you came into the game. The whole experience was different."

Of the 245 games he has pitched in during his five-year professional career, just one has been as a starter.

That start came in 1991 for the Pirates' short-season Class A Welland farm club in the New York-Penn League, five weeks after Christiansen signed.

BASEBALL

"He was a competitor, he worked hard," said committee chairman Bill White, a former Bunning teammate. "He prepared. He was just a hell of a pitcher. He worked very hard to get where he was in baseball."

Foster led the Negro Leagues in strikeouts four times. Hanlon won five pennants in a managing career from 1889-1907.

The Hall and baseball itself had hoped to elect a living candidate to present at Cooperstown next summer, and found them in Weaver and Bunning.

Not since 1960 has there not been at least one new member enshrined.

Bunning received a standing ovation when his selection was announced to the House of Representatives. "His selection to the Hall of Fame was not by baseball writers, but by the veterans themselves, which, it seems to me, makes it a little loftier in stature," said Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., in announcing the selection.

After several colleagues praised Bunning, he acknowledged the applause.

"It's hard to speak after 25 years. I've been retired from baseball 25 years. None of the numbers that were on the back of my card have changed in that time ... It's been a long waiting process. Thank God it happened while I was still on my feet."

Because today is mystery meat day.
